The Misspent Life of William III., of Holland, Drawing to a Close.

Sudden Wealth of a Paris Concert Master Whose Wife Was in Favor

Mme. Ambre, the Dancer and Singer Whom His Majesty Made

Paris Correspondence: You need not worry over the the news from the Hague about the King of Holland's health, for Magon of Grandselve, a modern diviner, who wishes to bring back to astrology its ancient glory, and who predicts the exact date of the death of each of Europe's sovereigns, grants six more years of life to William III, fixing the date of his demise for 1895. According to the constellations the chances are that his last years will be very unfortunate, as the horoscope of a man who is born "under the first degree of fishes, in the year of the moon in the cycle of Venus, on the day of Mercury," is not very flattering.

It ought not to make much difference one way or other, though the date of the old fellow's death, for he will occupy in old fellow's death, for he will occupy in history only a very unimportant place; but when it comes to a certain sort of record of the second half of this century, he can contest first place with Victor Emmanuel of Italy and Charles XV of Sweden. The Comedie Francaise, the grand opera, and even the varieties, where Judic is now the reigning star, have furnished a large contingent to his royal nibs, but the most sensational liaison he ever had was one with Elisa Musard, wife of an orchestra leader, who instituted a series of contractions of the series of contractions. tra leader, who instituted a series of concerts upon the present site of the Jardin de Paris, which still rest in the memory of the generation of the Second Empire, and who was the original starter of the Jardin Ma-bille of naughty memory.

Alfred Musard was the son of a musician who made the generation of 1830 leap and dance and who attached his name to quadwho made the generation of 1830 leap and dance and who attached his name to quadrilles that still soothe in a dreamy way certain French grandparents. Elegant in his person, of an excelent education, a musician like his father, and knowing how to wield a fiddle bow, young Alfred, after having scattered a lot of money to the four winds, set sail for the United States to direct there some concerts similar to those created in Paris by his lather. He had on our side of the ocean as much success as the old man had on this, and his handsome figure secured him certain other laurels not less precious to some mortals. At any rate, he captivated the attention of a young lady, then a fascinating woman in her circle in New York. The series of concerts terminated, he returned to France with his conquest, and on landing hastened to give her his name legally. In the artistic world, where the couple moved every one was struck with the distinctive beauty of the young wife. She was still far from the rich robes and fabulous diamonds with which she afterwards regaled herself, but she was not less pleasing in a simple dress of black silk with a cashmere shawl thrown over her pretty shoulders.

The husband had founded as I have pleasing in a simple dress of black sits with a cashmere shawl thrown over her pretty shoulders.

The husband had founded, as I have said, the Musard concerts in the Champs Elysees, and from the very first drew to his musical reunions in the open air the best and most elegant company. At the same time he composed several dances, which were heard on all pianos, and then all of a sudden he abandoned his work, renounced musical composition, and rode about Paris in a chaise drawn by ponies which he drove himself. There was talk about an American heritage, but the gossips had not long to wait to find out the real story. To the pony chaise succeeded a phacton drawn by a pair of horses worth more than $4,000; the wife promenaded in the Bols a landau more elegant and more correct than the best equipages of more famous persons, and a master coachman fitted up stables in an immense building built connected to the immense building built connected to the Musard residence on the Avenue d'Iena Musard residence on the Avenue d'lena. For their country residence they purchased the chateau of Villequier on the banks of the Seine, and when they went there it was in the sumptuous railway carriage of the Duc de Morny, which had been bought at his liquidation sale. Then, finally, when the Grand Duke of Tuscany, being dethroned, put up his villa on Lake Como for sale, this couple bought it and occupied it in lordity style.

in lordly style.

There was in all this an overwhelming luxury whose suddenness seems to imply the magic ring of a fairy, an improvised fortune which seemed to belong more to the realms of romance than of real life, and at last the key to this enigma was found in royal hands.

His majesty, William III, King of the Netherlands, being in Paris on one of his frequent sprees, fell in love with Mme. Musard, and then undertook to rival the Musard, and then undertook to rival the magnificent goings on of Louis XiV with Mme. Du Barry. The lovely wife of the orchestra leader and the naughty monarch indulged in all sorts of orgies; and at certain dates, when he was not in Paris she was conducted to the frontier of the estates of her august lover by her legal lord and master. At the door of the capital a mail coach picked her up, and, accompanied by a confidential up, and, accompanied by a confidential maid of honor, she was taken to a hunting maid of honor, she was taken to a hunting box concealed at the bottom of the palace wood where she remained two or three days, never more. Then her Willy sent her away in the same secret fashion as she came, loaded with gold presents and souvenirs, among the lot being a little bird in a cage, of which she rid herself without the least regret at the first frontier.

But if the fair traveler cared little for her birdie, certainly she clung on to the package that invariably accompanied it. It was a box very like some of those reticules or knit work handbags that New England ladies are never separated from, in this, at least, that it had a little of everything in it. There were pictures, long sik thing in it. There were pictures, long silk stockings, brilliant diamonds, rolls of linen, high-heeled gaiters, fine feathers and what not besides to make a woman happy.

Once a year William III. and Elisa went to spend a fortnight of summer pleasure in Switzerland, and there on the border of the beautiful lake that fronts Lucerne she cooed and he billed until the fifteen days were gone and he was forced to take up the scepter and wear his crown

Mme. Musard held the place of royal favorite until she had saved up a large for-tune, then she got rid of her Dutch lover and henceforward had only one care, that and henceforward had only one care, that of living tranquilly and happily with her husband. Everything else was useful; he alone was agreeable. He was the grand love of her life, but her diamonds were her

"When I die," she said one day, "place me in a cheap coffin and lay all my jewel boxes open on my bed." Poor woman! She little dreamed that she would die before she was 50, blind, and she would die before she was 50, blind, and on the iron bedstead of an insane asylum.

Another of the king's sweethearts was Emilia Ambre, who, however, held sway for a short time only. But she consoled herself for the end of a love that was as rapid as it was royal by artistic successes on the lyric stage, and many an American applauded her to the skies when she went to the United States afew years ago. While she had possession of William's affections she came to be known among the Dutch

The grace and devotion of this young life have been the consolation of his old age, just as the birth of an only daughter, born of this union, has been their united pride.

When William succeeded his father to When William succeeded his father to the throne, in 1849, he was absent from Holland. One of the ministers of the dead sovereign went in search of him and discovered him in Scotland, travelling incognito with a French singer. He was forty years old then and onght to have known better. However,he returned to the Hague, put on his crown and devoted most of his time and attention, until twelve years ago, to the female portion of this curious world to the best of his ability.

DEATH AT THE BRIDAL.

A Dying Man Married and His Body Mys teriously Disappears.

Montreal, Que., Special: This city is agitated over the story of a mystery. Mr. Ralph Boeheamil Husson was about 35 years old. He had every luxury and never soiled his fingers with work. His father, who owns a large estate in England, has a splendid mansion in Brighton and a town residence in London. Ralph, during his earlier years, received a liberal education. As he grew up he became delicate, and with a view of benefitting by the bracing air of Canada he came out here two years ago. He did not travel extensively, but after seeing a little of the country he settled down in Montreal. There was an attraction here—Miss Mary Mulcahy, daughter of Mrs. Mulcahy, of No. 1 Edward street Miss Mary Mulcahy was Mr. Husson's fate. Mr. Husson was good looking, and had the address of a gentleman. Miss Mulcahy had been reared in poverty; she was simple and modest. The two became acquainted. They became friends. Mr. Husson saw Miss Mulcahy at her mother's house, and they became engaged. Mr. Husson pressed Miss Mulcahy to marry him, and then accompany him to England. Mrs. Mulcahy objected on the ground that her daughter was too young. Mr. Husson entreated in vain, and left for London alone. earlier years, received a liberal education.

Mr. Husson entreated in vain, and left for London alone.

Shortly after his return home symptoms of decline manifested themselves. His father consited the best physicians and Husson was told that he must take the utmost care of himself. He corresponded regularly with his fiancee and the marriage was fixed for the 15th of March. But the decline quickened and Mr. Husson felt that death was approaching. He determined to brave the winter on the Atlantic and come out to marry the girl he loved. In vain the family doctor warned him that he could never survive an ocean voyage. He was not to be denied, and about twelve days ago, accompanied by his father, the doctor, a priest and a friend of the family, he set sail from London for New York.

Arrived in New York after a rough voyage the prognostications of the doctor were verified. Mr. Husson was dying. A hurried telegram was sent to Miss Mulcahy on Monday afternoon last, telling her to be London alone.

Monday afternoon last, teiling her to be sure to be in Bonaventure station upon the arrival of the New York train, as Mr.

Husson, who was in a dying state, was coming.

Miss Mulcahy was in attendance. The party arrived. Mr. Husson was pale in death. The meeting between the lovers was affecting. The party got into sleighs, and were driving off to Mrs. Mulcahay's when Mr. Husson became livid and gasped for breath. It was feit that he was dying. In that solemn and tragic moment he motioned that the priest should join them together. Miss Mulcahy, who was greatly overcome, consented, and there, in the cold air, without altar or flowers or favors, Mr. Husson and Miss Mulcahy were made man and wife. Two minutes afterward Mr. Husson fell back in the sleigh dead. The marriage and the death were both advertised in the local papers.

The marriage and the death were both advertised in the local papers.

Here the mystery begins. Nobody knows what became of the dead man's body. Mrs. Mulcahy refuses to speak and the bereaved bride is silent in her newly donned widow's weeds. The mother of the bride corroborated the story as told above, but refuses to say by what priest the two were married and professes absolute ignorance as to the disposition of the the two were married and professes absolute ignorance as to the disposition of the corpse. Diligent inquiries at the cemeteries fail to reveal the interment of any such body. All the leading undertakers declare they have not supplied a coffin for any such person as Mr. Husson. The authorities at the railway stations are unanimous in the statement that no corpses have been shipped away this week, either to New York or elsewhere. In fact, if the ground had opened and swallowed up coffin, body and all the mystery could not be more complete.

Mrs. Mulcahy said, in regard to th young lady's financial position as a widow,
"If she had gone to England with his father she would have shared his property, but now she will get only income enough to keep her."

"What became of the corpse?" "What became of the corpse?"
"I know nothing at all about it."
"But why the mystery, Mrs. Mulcahy?"
"Well, find out what became of the corpse, and then you'll know all about it. I know nothing about it. His father was angry because my daughter would not go back to England with him, and he told me sething. His teed, the ready home. nothing. He took the body home, I sup

This is all Mrs. Mulcahy would say about the matter.

HOME TERTIMONY

HELENA, Oct. 7, 1887. I was suffering from an unusually bad cough, my lungs were sore and congested, and I consulted one of the best physicians and I consulted one of the best physicians in Helena, whose prescriptions failed to relieve me. I became alarmed, and at the suggestion of a friend purchased a bottle of Acker's English Remedy for coughs, and after taking it according to directions was completely cured. I therefore cheerfully recommend it.

The Greatest Prize Drawing in The World.

No Such Chance Ever Before Offered to Secure A Fortune For so Small an investment

The time for the drawing of the Montana Investment Company, of Helens, M. T., March 39, is rapidly approaching. Never before in the history of the country has such a chance been offered to secure so valuable a property as the $300,000 Aborn House, of Des Moines, lowa, by the investment of the small sum of $5. Kvery man who holds a ticket is not doing himself justice, unless he doubles or triples his purchases, and a man is not true to his friends if he allows any of them to be left in ignorance of this great offer. This will probably be the last opportunity for a lawful drawing in the territory, and the last chance to secure a fortone for $5. Clubs should be organized in every village or city and so take advantage of the company's great offer of five whole tickets for $30, and ten whole tickets for $30, and ten whole tickets for $50, hemember there are 183 cash prizes also, from $5,000 d wn, and every ticket stants an equal chance of drawing the hotel or one of the 183 cash prizes.
